- Prudential PruFund Cautious: Unit Price Adjustment of -2.4% on 25 November 2018 for Pensions / ISAs.

Prudential changed the smoothing process with effect from 25 November 2018. The smoothing works by comparing the actual value of the assets into which Prudential invests with the value paid out. When this is within plus or minus 5% at a quarter date, there is no change to the price. When there is a change in the price it is known as a Unit Price Adjustment. If the price ever goes outside of plus or minus 10% at any time there can be an immediate change. Prudential intends to change the quarter date range to plus or minus 4% and plus or minus 8% at all other times. Prudential is making this change because there has been less volatility than it expected when it formulated this fund. Further, to lessen the unit price movements when boundaries are exceeded in whichever direction. Affected investors notified.

- Threadneedle Strategic Bond fund: Performance below average over five years. Consider an alternative.
- Woodford: Equity Income fund & Patient Capital Trust underperforming compared with funds of a similar nature. The portfolio's positioning is based on Woodford's economic outlook being very different from consensus in three areas:
 - The first is that he believes the Chinese growth will slow and so demand for commodities will fall and so will their prices, affecting share prices of companies acting in this field.
 - Secondly, he believes that the US political and economic position will deteriorate.
 - Thirdly, that the outlook for the UK economy after Brexit is better than most think it will be. As a result, the portfolio is tilted to domestically orientated companies.
 - In addition, there have been three main stock specific issues, which have impacted particularly on the portfolio performance. These are Provident Financial, the non-standard lender, Capita, which is undergoing a re-structuring and like Provident Financial has had a rights issue recently, and also Prothena, a pharmaceutical company, which has had a drug trial failure.
